Discover fascinating government information documents focused on paleontology and related scientific works through our latest Special Collections & Archives display, running through early September.

The Special Collections & Archives Government Information/ACAD Program presents a unique showcase of government publications related to paleontology and earth sciences. This educational display highlights the wealth of scientific information available through government agencies and research institutions.

Display runs through September 5, 2025 in the Government Information area on the lower level, Merrill-Cazier.

What You'll Find

The display features materials presented in an elegant sleeping beauty case, complemented by wall-mounted posters and a dedicated bookstand with additional browsing materials. Visitors can explore government documents that showcase paleontological research, fossil discoveries, and related scientific studies.

Visit during regular library hours to explore this fascinating collection of government scientific resources.
