Celebrate National Archives Month by diving into stories, landscapes, and lives captured in the past. Discover how our digitized archives can take you on a visual journey through time—no time machine needed.

October is National Archives Month—and there's no better way to celebrate than by exploring some of our most fascinating digital collections. Whether you're curious about early railroad expansion, the imagery of iconic Western authors, or rare 19th-century photographs, the Digital History Collections at USU Libraries offer something inspiring for every student.

Outdoor Recreation Archive

The Outdoor Recreation Archive is a unique collection founded in 2017 through a partnership between USU Special Collections & Archives and the Outdoor Product Design & Development program. It documents the history of outdoor gear—books, catalogs, magazines, photographs, manuscripts, and more—and highlights how people have experienced and shaped nature over time.

Sun Pictures of Rocky Mountain Scenery

This photo-rich digital book, Sun Pictures of Rocky Mountain Scenery, includes thirty photographic views along the Pacific rail line—from Omaha to Sacramento. Compiled by geologist and explorer F. V. Hayden, the book offers a powerful blend of science, photography, and adventure in the great American West.
